Humour and its influence on the lives of people

Plato

“Joking means trying to give yourself a sense of superiority by making fun of other people, and only people of lesser worth do this. “

Sigmund Freud

“Laughter is a safely discharging nervous energy. It provides relief and self-gratification and makes potentially damaging conflicts harmless.”

Laughter is the best medicine

Nowadays laughter is considered to be the best medicine. Nothing works faster or more dependably to bring our mind and body back into balance than a good laugh.

Without laughter
life on our planet
would be intolerable.

(Steve Allen)

Humour as part of national culture

Humour differs depending on :

- geographical location
 - culture
 - maturity
- level of education
 - intelligence
- the history of the nation
 - social values
- traditions and ideology

British Humour

Of all the characteristics, good and bad, for which the British are known in the outside world, their sense of humour is one of the best-known and most positively regarded.

Laughter is the closest distance
between two people.
(Victor Borge)

Word-play and verbal nonsense

The Goon Show

a British radio comedy programme, originally produced and broadcast by BBC from 1951 to 1960.

Many elements of the show satirised contemporary life in Britain, parodying aspects of show business, commerce, industry, art, politics, diplomacy, the police, the military, education, class structure, literature and film.

- Why did the bus stop?
- Because it saw the zebra crossing.

- Do you have any grandchildren?
- No, all my children are just ordinary.

Linguistic humour

Round the Horne

a British radio comedy programme, which influenced the British taste for linguistic humour

Tourist: Can you tell me the way to Bath please?

Policeman: Well, first you turn on the hot and cold taps then ...

Subversion of the rules of logic

Monty Python

a British surreal comedy group

- Why did the bees go on strike?
- Because they wanted more honey and shorter working flowers.

Henry: The cat wants to go out.
Min: How can you tell?
Henry: He's put his hat on.

Subversion of the rules of logic

In Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking-Glass the author creates a parallel universe governed by rules which appear ridiculous to the reader, but are entirely logical within their own dimension.

A joke's a very serious thing.
(Charles Churchill)

Conflict between two ideas & Displacement

- What is at the back of a bee?
- It`s bee-hind.

- My dog has no nose.
- Then how does it smell?
- Terrible!

- Doctor, I keep thinking that there are two of me.
- OK, but don`t both speak at once.

“The Importance of Being Earnest”

The main feature of British humour

It is extremely important that the British are sure that no other nation is allowed to laugh at them except themselves.

This probably comes from the British pride, self-respect and a high self-esteem.

British Humour

Humour is one of the British national peculiarities. Humour is like a drug to many of the British; they can't get enough of it, and they are endlessly inventive in creating more of it.

Their sense of humour has been one of their most enduring characteristics, precisely because they have found it so adaptive and helpful in hard times.
