The creator of the “Myths of Cthulhu” is so unique that in literature there is a separate genre - “Lovecraft horrors”. Howard gained thousands of followers, such as August Derlet and Stephen King, but during his lifetime did not see a single printed book. Lovecraft is known for the works “Call of Cthulhu”, “Hidden Fear”, “On the Other Side of Sleep”, “Outcast” and others.

The border consists of symmetrical, swirling floral motifs with leaves and small flowers, creating a classic, decorative frame.

Childhood and youth

Howard was born on March 15, 1937 in the capital of Roth Island – Providence. This city with its chaotically located streets, crowded squares and gothic spires is often found in the works of Lovecraft.

The childhood of young Howard was pretty specific. A quiet and smart boy was raised in the family of the jewelry salesman Winfield Scott, who went insane. Winfield was placed in a hospital, where he soon died, and Sarah Susan with a two-year-old son moved to her relatives.

But soon Winfield's mental illness came on her. Susan became obsessed with the idea that Howard is all she has. She even dressed the boy in girlish clothes.

Lovecraft sat day and night in the grandfather's library, leafing through books. Howard was receiving home education since the boy had poor health. In the end, he never received a high school diploma, and he was ashamed all his life for this. Howard's grandfather died in the 1904, and his mother was placed in the same hospital as his father Winfield. She died on the May 21, 1921. Susan wrote letters to her beloved son until the day she died. Howard was very depressed and even thought of

Howard Phillips Lovecraft picked up ink and pen as a child. The boy was tormented by nightmares all the time. Howard couldn't manage these dreams or wake up. His raging imagination was creating terrible creatures with webbed wings. In 1917 Howard published the stories "The Crypt" and "Dagon."

Fans of the writer know that Lovecraft refers in his works to an ancient sources – NECRONOMICON, which the author created himself.

In the 1928 he created “Call of Cthulhu”, in 1929 - “The dread of Danwich” and in the 1931 - “Ridges of Madness”. Lovecraft books are scary because of the psychological horror of the unknown. He didn't just intimidate the reader by vampires, monsters, zombies and other characters.

Person al life

Howard Lovecraft lived a reclusive life. He could stay at home day and night. His stories were actively published in magazines, but there was not enough money for a decent existence. Howard Lovecraft was very kind and sympathetic person, whose soft smile gave warmth. In addition, the author of horror stories adored cats, ice cream and traveling.

It is known about only one love of the writer – a native of the Russian Empire, Sonia Green. The lovers moved from quiet Providence to New York, but Lovecraft could not stand the new life. Soon the couple broke up.
