The government

The UK has parliament and the Government, the basis for the creation and functioning of which is the so-called Westminster system, which is all too common. Therefore, considering the system of entities of public administration in the UK in the first place, should be considered by the Parliament.

The situation in the United Kingdom

The country is situated on the Islands North-West Europe. It owns the island of Britain, part of Ireland island and nearby Islands. The country is divided into four historical and geographical areas: England is the main core of the state, and attached to it later by conquering Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland (Ulster), which have a very slight and uncertain elements of autonomy. The country is called great Britain by the name of the largest island, or England – the name of the historic core. Official name – United Kingdom of great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Climate

Britain called the country of fogs and rains. The country's climate varies from region to region. In England the climate is mild and humid, due to the relative warmth of the surrounding seas. The average annual temperature is about +11 °C in southern and +9 °C in the northeast. Scotland is the coldest region of the UK. In the mountains North there is snow from November to April-may. The climate of Wales and Northern Ireland is mild and humid. The average annual temperature for Northern Ireland is +10 °C. the Most rainfall in Scotland, Northern Ireland, in the mountains of England and Wales (1000-1500 mm per year). The least rainfall in South-East England (600-750 mm per year).
