Chuck Berry

Mick Jagger and Keith Richards studied together, after school for a long time did not communicate. But happened to meet in 1961 and found out that both like rhythm and blues, and that they have a mutual friend - Dick Taylor. The three of us decided to create a band called Little Boy Blue and the Blue Boys and learned a few songs from the repertoire

And

Bo Diddley

The group debuted on July 21, 1962 in London's Mark-Club. The professionals of jazz and blues met the new band pretty cool, refusing to give her professionalism.

In 1963 their second single, Wanna Be Your Man (J. Lennon and P. McCartney) was released, which in 1964 was among the top ten. In early 1964, the press had negative feedback about the group, which were caused by inadequate behavior of musicians, as well as the length of their hair

- The group sought unexpected and even sharp turns, choosing the stage image of the rebels protesting against social conventions. In the fourth album, they included such contrasting in style and content as Mother's Little Helper and Lady Jane. In the work of the group there were even traits of misogyny (Under My Thumb and Stupid Girl). Nihilism Rolling Stones reached its peak in the song Have You Seen Your Mother Baby, Standing In The Shadow ?, which was lashed with obscene language. Nevertheless, the group was accompanied by commercial success, their fees were constantly growing.

- On the wave of deafening success, the musicians had problems - drugs. Almost the whole of 1967 passed under the sign of litigation over the offenses of Mick Jagger, Keith Richards, Brian Jones related to drug use. Despite this, in 1967 there were three albums, one of which was wearing the extravagant title Their Satanic Majesties Request and was a psychedelic experiment. However, professional criticism did not appreciate him very much. And only the single Jumping Jack Flash (1968) restored the former reputation of musicians.

- To superstardom status, the author's duet raised "(I Can not Get No) Satisfaction" (summer of 1965). Already in itself (later recognized as classical), the guitar riff (originally copied the sound of the wind section) showed that the Rolling Stones had separated from the roots of the traditional blues and had embarked on their own development path.
