

Extinction of animals

ENDANGERED ANIMALS ARE SPECIES THAT ARE UNDER THE THREAT OF EXTINCTION.

- When an animal or species is endangered, they are disappearing fast from the face of the planet.

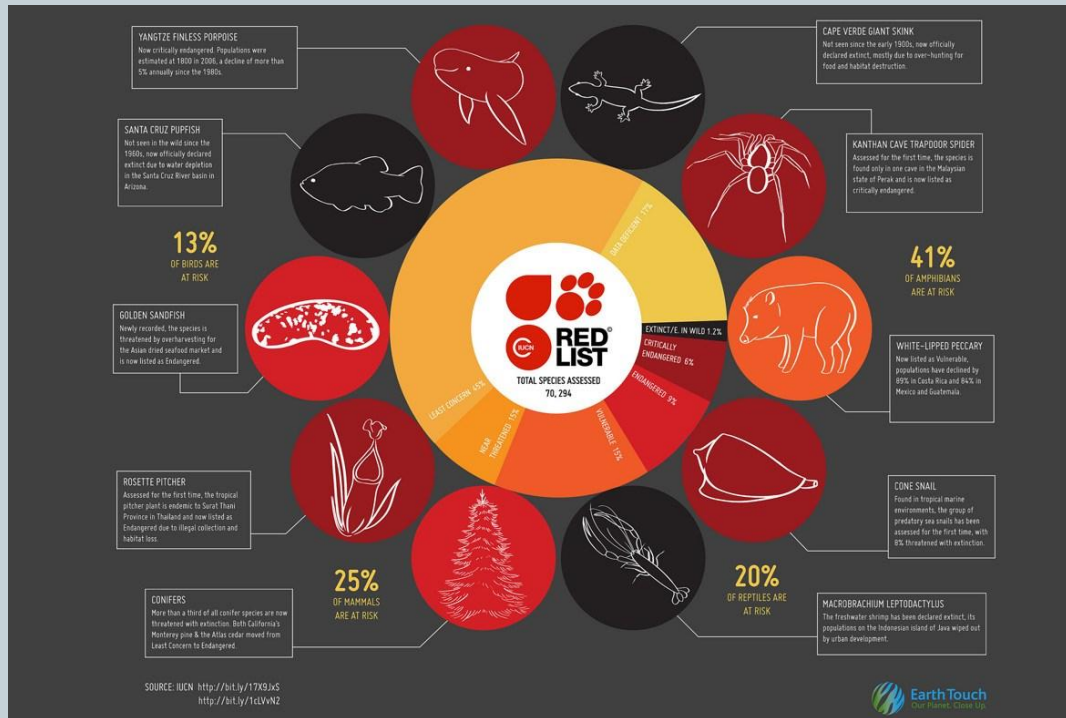

- The IUCN (International Union for Conservation of Nature) has a list of endangered species, which is called the Red list.

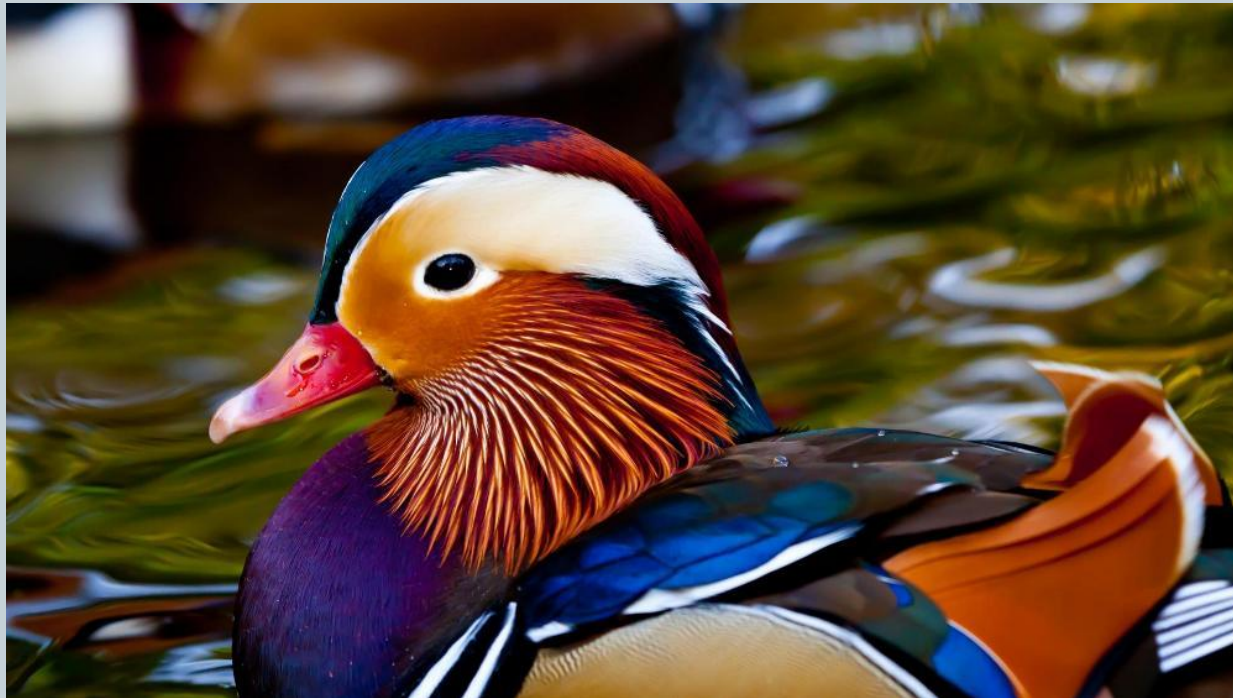

● The following are some of animals part of the endangered species list :

Mandarin Duck

- The Mandarin duck might be spotted in lakes and ponds of Britain; however, the bird originally belongs to or is a native of Eastern Asia countries, such as China, Japan and Korea.

- The bird is generally found in waters near the woods.

Jackass Penguin

- The Jackass penguin is the sole African penguin. It was one of the very common sea-birds of Africa, with South Africa and Namibia replete with the bird.

- The bird's survival is primarily dependent on sea creatures.

- However, the constant fishing around the area led to less food for birds.

Siberian Tiger

- The Siberian tiger is the largest, in sheer size, of all the tigers on the planet.

- Thought the animal is highly endangered, especially, when there were just 20 Siberian Tigers left, the population of tigers has stabilized.

- As per the IUCN, there are close to 360 Siberian tigers in Russia as of the 21 th century. But because of hunting the number of tigers is decreasing.

- Finally I would like to say that we can save the wildlife in the world, by uniting our efforts and acting together.

