

*International Environmental Law
and World Order*

International environmental law
(sometimes, international ecological law) is a field of international law regulating the behavior of states and international organizations with respect to the environment.

The main international treaties concerning the environment are:

1972 UN Convention on the Human Environment;

1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), which produced the Rio Declaration;

1997 Kyoto Protocol, entered into force on February 16, 2005;

2002 World Earth Summit

The International Environmental Law Project (IELP) works with governments, non-governmental organizations and international institutions to develop, implement and enforce international environmental law to tackle some of today's most challenging global issues.

World order is the political, economic, or social situation in the world at a particular time and the effect that this has on relationships between different countries.

The New World Order (NWO) is a conspiracy theory that a powerful group is in control of the world, or on the verge of gaining such control.

Who is the NWO?

International bankers, oil barons, the United Nations, the Royal Family of England, the leaders of all major industrial countries like the United States, England, Germany, Italy, Australia, New Zealand, etc.

NATO is a military tool of the NWO.
