

TRANSPORT IN LONDON

London is a huge capital, so public transport is vital for citizens and tourists, for whom getting around London can be very difficult. Unlike Russian public transport, the British transport system is reliable and quite cheap. However, due to the increase in the number of cars, London traffic has increased 3 times, and the length of traffic jams has increased dramatically.

London has three main modes of transport : metro and buses and taxis.

metro	buses	taxis
-------	-------	-------

- ▣ Buses are the best for sightseeing, especially double Decker buses. However, they move quite slowly, especially in rush hour. There were no doors on the traditional two-storey buildings and passengers jumped and jumped out of the bus, and the conductor charged the passengers. Currently, the fare is paid directly to the driver.

- In London there were recently one-storey buses, which are called "Red Arrow".

- ▣ The London underground, also called Tube, is a more convenient, fast and direct form of travel. The subway opened in the late 19th century, in 1884. Now there are more than 270 stations. You can recognize metro stations by red and blue signs on the streets. There is no fixed fare because it depends on the distance of the trip. You can buy a ticket or a token from the clerk at the box office or at the vending machine. There are 8 different subway lines in London. Travellers who do not know the metro should consult the map.
