The emphasizing function is mostly performed by degree adverbs (e.g. how, so, too, extremely, terribly, awfully, very etc.) often used in set formulae of politeness to intensify, say, the expression of gratitude or sympathy, refusals or apologies which - reduced to mere thank you or sorry - would sound rude – I'm so sorry.

Some degree adverbs like just, really, fully, completely etc. or stylistically coloured verbs (e.g.: love, hate, die) or adjectives (e.g.: super, great, smashing, horrible, awful, stupid etc.) could be regarded as intensifiers when they lose their direct

ВСТАВНЫЕ КОНСТРУКЦИИ

Emphatic agreement containing adverbs like very, certainly, definitely, alright and sentences with verbs of thinking (believe, think, suppose, hope, expect) which often help to soften opinions, as well as phrases of reservation (e.g.: in most cases, in principle, to a certain extent).

Softening formulae I agree but.../only /except; I'm sorry but.../I'm afraid but... are mostly used for apologies and polite refusals.

ЗНАКИ ВНИМАНИЯ

Attention signals are used to prevent or fill in different possible pauses in a conversation. Those phrases perform the important function of indicating that you follow what's going on, your reaction is adequate and the talk wouldn't end abruptly.

Вопросы — реплики

2) question tags (positive and negative), e.g.: "He's resolved to marry Ann. "- "Oh, is he?" - "Yes, he thinks he couldn't live without her. " - "Couldn't he?"

Another variety is the so called "same-way" tag (only positive), e.g.: "So you think you're the boss, do you?"

Note that negative tags are used for emphatic agreement, e.g.: "She was great!" - "Yes, wasn't she?"

3) echo questions, e.g.: "Now he works as a paleontologist. " - "As a what?"
