. René Grousset wrote that they formed a particular branch of the "Scytho-Sarmatian family" originating from nomadic Iranian peoples of the northwestern steppe in Eurasia.

CONCLUSION

The history of the world is presented to us by great dates and accomplishments, but it all began from a small one. Our closest ancestors-the Australopithecus – survived million of years of evolution, during which they mastered hunting, farming, gathering, and inventing new tools. And only after all the complex stages of development of the primitive society, could the next stage of development.
