- The 600-year-old Nanxin Granary reopened as a museum showcasing the country's imperial grain storage and water transportation system. Photos by Jason Wang
- Proud history of a royal granary
- Nanxin Granary, located on what is now Dongsì Shítiao, was a storehouse for grain meant exclusively to be served to the royal family during the Ming (1368-1644) and Qing (1644-1911) dynasties. It was built in 1409 during the reign of the Yongle Emperor (1403-1424) on the foundations of the Yuan Dynasty's (120-1368) Beitai Granary. This makes it as old as The Forbidden City.
- The imperial granaries measured volume in ao, which initially meant three store rooms and later, five. In its heyday, Nanxin Granary had 76 ao ?the most in a Qing granary. The structure still has nine ao, making it the largest and best-preserved imperial granary in the country.
- Today, the vicinity of the granary's has taken on new life as a "culture street": it has become a base to more than cultural organizations, artist studios, tea houses, shops and restaurants. Some portions of the granary have been converted into warehouses.
