ÉIRE

CULTURE

- The culture of Ireland is of great significance to the world's heritage . For the most part, the Irish are very educated, well - mannered and polite people. And they, like every nation, have their own traditions and customs.

PEOPLE

- The Irish are probably the most hospitable and friendly people in the world. Any guest is like a brother to them. / if you are not from the UK, you can safely contact the residents with any request or question. They have a certain dislike and distrust for the English people.

NATIONAL CLOTHES

- The national costume of the Irish man is considered to be a kilt in a check, a raincoat or a sweater. However, these garments have undergone significant changes over time. No one will remember the real Irish national costume for sure. After all, its history begins somewhere in the 6-7 century. Then it was very simple clothes: a long linen shirt and a woolen cloak, always with a large hood.

FOOD

- With the kitchen, everything is very simple and without frills. You can even say that the cuisine of Ireland is the Irish themselves. Simple, uncomplicated. And, of course, delicious. Special preference is given to potatoes and meat. These are stew, Colcannon, chump, Fudge, Guinness pie, pickled herring, tea, beer and real Irish whiskey.

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY

A special day for Irish culture is March 17. Everything around is transformed, taking a solid green color. People, clothing, jewelry, decoration, and even beer turn green.

Saint Patrick is the most revered Saint in Ireland. It is believed that he brought Christianity to the "emerald Isle", baptized Ireland and delivered it from paganism. However, for several centuries, his memorial day is celebrated not only in Ireland itself, but also in many other countries—Canada, Great Britain, the United States, Nigeria, and 10 years ago, Russia joined these countries.

NATIONAL LANGUAGE

- The national language of the Irish is , respectively, Irish (Gaelic), but only 380 thousand people of the country speak it fluently, and 1.6 million claim to know their native language. And this is despite the fact that the population of Ireland is 4.6 million people, and if you include Northern Ireland, then all 6.5 million.

CATS

- The remoteness from mainland Europe caused some features of the fauna of Ireland. Tourists will not meet here snakes and ferrets, there are also no ROE deer and moles on the island . But there are a huge number of cats , and their number is twice the number of dogs .
