When people decide to visit Russia, they endure the headaches that come with obtaining a visa and the long and arduous flight. But what all these tourists have in common is that they appreciate the art, architecture, and history of Russia, and want to learn more about it.

Classical music is one of the most highly-revered arts in Russia. Russian classical music has a distinctive history, separate from Western Europe and at the same time highly influenced by Western countries. Some of the most internationally-renowned composers came from St. Petersburg and Moscow as well as from smaller towns.

Ballet music composers, opera composers, and even jazz musicians all made their mark in Russia's history. Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninoff and Shostakovich are only some of the big names that every music lover will recognize, but there are many more that have their roots in Russia.

To revere [ri'viə] – чтить, уважать
